

Periodic Tables For Chemistry

"Periodic Table of the Elements"

[<http://www.cs.ubc.ca/cgi-bin/nph-pertab/tab/periodic-table>]

This Canadian site can be easily viewed through a graphical browser as a table or through a LYNX / text browser as a list. The list can be sorted alphabetically by the name of the element, its periodical table symbol, or numerically by the atomic number of the element.

Webelements, The Periodic Table on the WWW

[<http://www.shef.ac.uk/chemistry/web-elements/main/index-nofr.html>]

Webelements, composed by Mark Winter, of University of Sheffield [England] has alphabetical and periodic table access to a remarkably detailed site. Be aware of alternative names, spellings and symbols; aluminum is written as "aluminium" here, and the names and symbols for elements 104 - 112 are still being resolved. The foreign names of an element [Italian: idrogeno; French: hydrogène; German: Wasserstoff], a brief history, and many pages of technical data are also available under each element's entry.

Electronic Resources for Children

These are some recommended children-oriented sites that were submitted by staff from public and academic libraries of northern New Jersey:

"BCCLS for Kids"

(Bergen County Cooperative Library System)

The Highlands Regional Office is moving

To make the Highlands Regional Library Cooperative (HRLC) Office more accessible, it is being relocated to Parsippany, and will be convenient from US Highway Route 46, Interstate Route 80, Interstate Route 287 and US Highway Route 202. Plans are under way for the staff to move into the new office (located at 120 Littleton Road) on or about November 1, 1998. More details will become available as that date approaches.

NJ Library Cooperatives' Homepages

The following list of URL's can be found at the State Library's site [<http://www.state.nj.us/statelibrary/njlibsot.htm>]; I thought it was worth repeating here. In the electronic addition of this newsletter, these sites are just one mouse click away. If you prefer getting the electronic edition instead of the print one, contact the editor of this publication (see box on back).

Looking for submissions

I try to cover as many issues related to librarianship as possible, but I write best from my experience as a reference librarian in a public library.

I would like to have an article appear some time in the future in this newsletter specifically about an academic library issue, but I'd like to have it done from the perspective of some one working in that field. I welcome anyone who would like to submit material to this newsletter about experiences, ideas, or issues related to academic librarianship (or any other topic).

Submissions of any sort can be forwarded by fax or email to me (see email address, fax number and phone number below). If you have some ideas that you'd like to see featured, give me a ring. I look forward to hearing from you. Thank you.
